Abu Dhabi electricity rates

Abu Dhabi is widely considered to be among the best places to move to in the UAE. The city features the beating heart of politics and culture in the UAE. It is also famous for its massive islands and beautiful theme parks. Planning to move there? Here's a full guide to the Abu Dhabi Housing Authority.

Similar to DEWA in Dubai, every resident in Abu Dhabi has to be registered with the Abu Dhabi Distribution. Those who want to know more about DEWA can check out these frequently asked questions concerning DEWA.

The Abu Dhabi Distribution Company (ADDC) is responsible for the regulation of water and electricity across all of Abu Dhabi. The ADDC provides residences in Abu Dhabi with recycled water and electricity. The company also provides a vast number of services to Abu Dhabi citizens. Here's everything to know about ADDC.

To register a property for ADDC, that property must first be registered in Tawtheeq. Tawtheeq translates to "attestation", and was established as a framework to formalize tenancy contracts. The process for registration in Tawtheeq is undertaken by the property owner or the real estate consultant.

Activating the ADDC account is a simple process. Before trying to activate the account, however, it is important to make sure that the related property has been registered in Tawtheeq.

Before getting into the Tariff and Consumption rates, there are a few things to know. Electricity and water consumption is divided into two categories: Green Band and Red Band. Consumption within these bands changes your electricity and water rates.

With all the development and opportunities, Abu Dhabi is quite an attractive place to move to. But before you make the move, make sure to know all about ADDC for a smooth transition.
