Dynamo magician secrets revealed

Magicians are fooling audiences into thinking they're seeking real magic by unwittingly causing them to blink at key moments in a show, research has revealed.

One of the oldest tricks in the illusionists' book is to relax members of an audience so that they lose concentration and fail to spot "secret actions".

Previous research has shown that blinking frequently occurs when attention is lowered, for instance during pauses in conversations and at the end of film scenes.

Psychologist Professor Richard Wiseman, a former professional magician and member of the Inner Magic Circle, who co-led the research, said: "Magicians know when audiences are allowing their attention to dip and that's when they do secret things that are likely to go unnoticed.

Generally, performers will try to make their whole show as casual and relaxed as possible in order to prevent spectators paying too much attention to what they are doing, said Prof Wiseman, who is based at the University of Hertfordshire.

Illusionist Dynamo (real name Steven Frayne) is back with the new TV series 'Magician Impossible' which promises to be even more exciting than the last.

A true magician never reveals his secrets, and Dynamo has kept very quiet on the matter. However, the internet is rife with fan theories about how he managed those mind blowing magic tricks.
